Entry-level accounting software only goes so far...

As businesses grow, manual systems evolve around limitations in software. This process of constantly plugging holes, applying band-aids, relying on spreadsheets or developing workarounds diverts attention from your core business – and that will cost you money.

Ask yourself these questions of your current system:

- Is inventory management a nightmare or non-existent?
- Do you use spreadsheets every day to manage data?
- Do you use work-arounds instead of proper processes?
- Is it hard to get the information and reports you need quickly and accurately?
- Are you entering the same information into multiple systems?
- Do you have key staff keeping valuable data in their heads?
- Do you have difficulty reflecting proper business processes in your software?

Is new business software a good investment?

Buying business management software is no different to buying a new piece of equipment. A business management system manages your entire business: without it working effectively, every part of your business will suffer.

“The real efficiency gained through moving to Accentis Enterprise was not a quantum leap but rather a far-reaching range of small efficiency gains throughout the business that has led to very significant long-term gains.”
